D.M.
MONTISQUE, MICH.
"I have moved from Morral, Ohio and wish to have my pen pals make note of my new address which appears right under this paragraph. I have received some mail and I would love to have more, so how about writing and I promise you answers."

NANCY SCHUMAKER
R.R. #2
MARION, OHIO

"To you servicemen who wrote me: I regret to say that I am not able to answer all the letters I received from you boys, although I wish I did have the time to do so. Many thanks for all the letters I did receive and I only wish I could have answered all of them, but time just does not permit me to answer so many. I had to answer on a first come, first serve basis, so to you boys who did not receive a reply from me, I am remembering you in my prayers and hoping you will write some other lucky girl and receive an answer. Again many thanks for all the letters and I'm truly sorry that I could not answer every one of them."

LUCILLE WOLF
STUBBINS, OREGON

"My name and address were printed in the Dec. issue of G.I. Joe. I was married just prior to the publication of that issue. It is no longer possible for me to write to the servicemen, though I am still receiving letters from them. That is the reason many of their letters have not been answered. I wish I could have answered everyone and I certainly am terribly sorry if I have disappointed anyone."

DORIS HISEY WIGLEY
"I wish to congratulate you on the fine job you are doing for the boys in service. I have distributed many of the names from your column. The increase of letters at mail call is a grand morale builder. Keep up the good work!"

DEAR GERTRUDE

Tokyo, Japan
May 29, 1956

Dear Gertrude,

Gee, babe, are you going to be proud of me after you get finished with reading this letter! Naturally, of course, I know how proud you are of me anyway, even without all the big new important responsibilities I have now got to be responsible for, but after I have finished telling you about how out of the whole entire Army they picked your ever-loving-husband-to-be to take charge of this big operation, you'll probably be so all-fired proud of me you'll sing it from the rooftops.

Orville Cot says the big important Brass must have been noticing right along the way I can take charge of things so good. He says that's the way it is in the Army. He says you can go along just being a plain honorable soldier for a long time, without ever even thinking that anybody is watching you all the time for discovering your hidden-away abilities. Then, he says, all of a sudden there's probably a big important meeting some place, and when your name comes up for taking charge of a big operation like this one, everybody at the meeting jumps up from where they're sitting and yells, "That's our man!"

I told Orville I wasn't exactly positive that was how it happened this time with me, because it was decided that I would take charge right there in the warehouse where I was standing when I dropped the crate of powdered eggs on my foot and yelled a little, and the Sarge came over and said it was okay volunteering but I didn't have to make such a mess about it and I better clean it up fast.

I told Orville I didn't hear anybody calling for volunteers for anything, but he said the Sarge probably just made it sound like that was how it happened so the other men standing around wouldn't feel hurt that it was me who was picked for taking charge, instead of any of them. Orville says in big important operations like this one, the Army don't want to have any hurt feelings among the men on account of that not being any good for keeping up with morale.

Anyway, Gertrude, I couldn't hardly believe my own ears when the Sarge told me what the big operation I have to be in charge of is!

Oh, I guess I better tell you the other news

I have first. We're coming home. No, not just me and Orville on another furlough, but the whole entire company, Gertrude, isn't that nice? We're being transferred back to the U. S. of A., and it's sure one big exciting thing to think about sailing back over that great big, beautiful ocean (the Pacific not the Atlantic), especially with everybody telling each other about how good I took charge. Orville says I don't realize how much everything is going to depend so heavy on me, so are you all set for the real big important news? Hold on to something, babe, because here comes the big news!

What I am going to be in charge of is—

Gosh, Gertrude, I'll have to finish this tomorrow! Orville just came in with a big bunch of stuff that's all part of my responsibilities now, and I have to go to work on them right away because of my being so responsible for them. I know how you will understand.

Dear Gertrude,

I am sure sorry I had to stop writing to you yesterday, but if you could see what Orville brought in for me to go to work on you'd wonder like I'm doing how I'm ever going to get done with all my responsibilities in time. Honest, Gertrude, after Orville dumped all the stuff on the floor it was hard for me to see him and for Orville to see me, there was so much of it between us. And just to show you again how much of a best buddy Orville is, it was him who got mad all of a sudden, and said that if the Army was going to give me all these responsibilities to take charge of then the Army ought to make sure I had a nice place for doing it in, and before I knew it Orville was going out to do something about it.

Well, babe, you sure ought to see what Orville did! Guess what? All because of him and how mad he got, this morning they gave me a great big plank for doing my responsible paper work at, and after Orville and me got it nailed on a couple of wooden horses over in the warehouse, it looks just like any of the regular big desks in HQ, only bigger, even if it don't have any drawers and telephones in it. Orville has painted a sign that says "QUIET" on it, and hung it on one end so nobody will be disturbing me, because in only three more days I have got to be finished with everything before we leave.

I told you yesterday, babe, about how we are all coming back to the U. S. of A., but now get set for the real big news about what I've been picked to take charge of, and right away you'll see how important it is that I've got this nice place for doing my paper work.

Your ever-loving-husband-to-be has been given command of seeing to it that all the barracks bags for the whole entire company get loaded on the boat in time!

There! I guess that'll make old man Flenner-dink eat back those words he said when I was delivering groceries for him that summer and gave the dog biscuits to Mrs. Hatch who has the Siam cat, and the tuna-fish to Mrs. Seepage who has the Airdale.

Anyway, on account of our setting sail for the United States of America exactly three days from now, you can see what a big operation it is that has to all be handled from my desk, and all the paper work has got to be very careful: Orville is being a wonderful buddy again, helping me read the names off the list while I print them on the tags, so we'll make sure that everybody has his own barracks bag with all his clothes, which is my responsibility, and I don't take it light.

I think I better stop writing now, Gertrude, and get back to some more printing so nothing can go wrong on June 3, when we set sail and my responsibilities will be all done. I'll write some more tomorrow, if I can work it in with my other paper work.

Dear Gertrude,

I guess it was a good thing I stopped writing yesterday when I did, and got back to all my paper work, because guess what, babe? It's all done!

I never thought I'd ever get through with it, but the name tags I had to print at my desk are so big and thick it made it look like there was a lot more of them than there was, and Orville and me were sure surprised when we came to the last one so fast. But don't get the idea that my responsibilities are finished yet, Gertrude. No, sir! I still have to make sure all my men get their barracks bags down to the dock in time for sailing June 3, and then I have to go down personally myself and take command of making sure that all the tags are in the right places, and that all the bags are on the right boat.

Orville has been bringing me lots of coffee because of the big responsible strain on me, and last night he gave my arm a good rub where it hurt from so much printing. I can tell you, Gertrude, this making sure a whole entire company gets transferred home on time is no easy thing. I guess Orville Cot is right when he says this is the kind of big operation that separates the men from the boys.

I am very tired, Gertrude. I will stop now.
S. C.

Dear Gertrude,

It is very late in the night today, as I am writing this, and even though Orville says it would maybe be better if I wrote to you tomorrow after a good night's sleep, I can't do that, Gertrude, because I can't sleep.

You can see, by looking at the top of this letter that I am still in Japan. We all are. It is raining outside, and we are all very cold without any field jackets which are all on the boat that sailed this afternoon with the rest of our clothes, which is where I took charge of putting them like I was picked to do. But it turns out I made a little mistake, Gertrude, and it is very hard to write you this, I thought we were setting sail for the United States on June 3, when it turns out to be July 3, instead. Orville is a wonderful buddy, though, even after this little mistake. He told me he told the Sergeant, who is looking for me, he didn't know where I was, but I guess he will find me tomorrow, because Orville says the Sergeant told him to tell me he'd be coming out tomorrow no matter how cold it was, even if he didn't have any clothes.

Please write to me, Gertrude!

"I SURE DON'T KNOW WHY, BUT THE OTHER DAY OUT ON THE RIFLE RANGE WHEN UGLY OTIS AN' ME WERE WORKIN' IN ONE OF THE PITS, THE DRONE OF THE BULLETS... RUNNIN' THE TARGETS ENDLESSLY UP AND DOWN... WAS LIKE A MONOTONOUS RHYTHM THAT WOULDN'T LET UP, IT WAS MAKIN' ME FEEL WOOLZY... LIKE SOMETHIN' WAS GOIN' TO HAPPEN I COULDN'T DO ANYTHIN' ABOUT! "I DIDN'T WAIT AROUND FOR ANY CHECKIN' ON MY AIM! I WAS HEADIN' FOR WHERE THAT WATER OUGHTA BE, WITH ONLY ONE THOUGHT..."
